One club to another

CPL. SAMUEL A. NASSO

The Marine Tactical Electronic Warfare Squadron 4 "Seahawks" patch may symbolize importance to some, but to Capt. Joshua H. Weiland, another level of significance is felt. Weiland joined the Marine Corps in 1996 and was assigned to VMAQ-4 as an EA-6B Prowler aircraft technician. After four years of service, Weiland got out of the Marine Corps, went to college, and then came back into the Marine Corps as an officer in 2003. After flight school, Weiland found himself back where he'd served seven years before, with VMAQ-4.

What separates one Marine from another? Perhaps a pair of sunglasses, ginger-red hair, a soft-spoken voice, a crisp haircut or maybe the way he wears his uniform. It could be his experience and the way he leads his junior Marines. Maybe it's that he's family-oriented, enjoys the outdoors and grew up in a small, tightly knit town.

Born in Park Falls, Wis., in 1977, Joshua H. Weiland grew up in a typical American family in a typical American town. With not much more than a couple of intersections in the middle of a national forest, Weiland was provided with the environment that fit his personality.

"My best friend from childhood and I honed our hunting and fort-building skills in the woods," he said.

Weiland grew up with two sisters and one brother. With one older sibling and two younger, Weiland said he experienced a typical American upbringing.

As the years passed, it came to that important time in life following high school when one has to decide what to do with his life.

Marines from the Installation Personnel Administration Center took a break from their daily grind to get a view of how the Marines of 2nd Low Altitude Air Defense Battalion work on a daily basis Jan. 17.

The battalion gave IPAC Marines lessons on the use of Stinger surface-to-air missile and .50-caliber Browning machine guns.

The Marines first viewed a camouflaged Humvee with a mounted .50-caliber machine gun and then went inside to train on the Improved Moving Target Simulator; a virtual-reality simulator for Stinger missiles.

IPAC Marines were awarded the opportunity of stepping out of their office and into the footsteps of Marines outside of the administration field.

"I thought it was pretty cool that we had a chance to go and see what other career fields do," said Pfc. Matthew J. Diamond, an administrative clerk at IPAC. "We got to do something we wouldn't normally do on a regular day. It's always good to get out of the office. The simulator itself was pretty awesome."

The cross-training may have been fun and games for the IPAC Marines, but there was a greater purpose behind it. Chief Warrant Officer Richard T. Walker, director of IPAC, was looking for an opportunity to show his Marines the Corps that they administratively support.

"I've always decided since I came here that a lot of Marines get stuck in the same day-to-day type job," said Walker. "So we took some of our top-notch Marines

Marines, Sailors can avoid social media hazards

STAFF SGT. ROMAN YUREK
MCAS CHERRY POINT

Social media has become a staple in society for families, consumers, businesses, governments and groups to share various pieces of information.

Although this open forum of communication is a great way to provide up to the minute updates, it can also become hazardous if erroneous information is released by mistake.

Amanda Bastyr, a student at the University of North Carolina and prior intern at the Joint Public Affairs Office on the air station, explained that information can be viewed by strangers due to the "friend of a friend" network established through sites like Facebook.

"Upon introducing a colleague to my boyfriend's mom, my boyfriend's mom said 'Oh, you're him.' She had never met my friend before and when I asked her how she knew him, she said she had seen his picture on Facebook," explained Bastyr.

Although this is a harmless example, the reality of social media is that private information can reach a wider network of people nearly instantaneously and in many ways uncontrollably. For the military, this can result in major violations of operational security and personally identifiable information being released and potentially causing harm to Department of Defense service members and their loved ones.

To combat the risks of a free-flowing age of information, the DoD, Department of the Navy and Headquarters Marine Corps have embraced the use of this technology to share the stories of service members, but has reminded personnel to do their part and adhere to operational security and personally identifiable information guidelines.

"Keep family safety top-of-mind when talking about service members and their loved ones, as enemies have noted publicly that they monitor social media sites for information on families, as well as troops and equipment," according to an excerpt from the Navy Command Social Media Handbook.

This handbook was created by the Department of the Navy to provide guidance on the use of social media sites both officially through command pages and unofficially through personal profiles.

The Marine Corps has implanted its own set of rules and guidance on <http://www.marines.mil/OMG>. This link lists guidance for Marines making unofficial posts on social media sites and can be shown to family members as well.

Taking the safety of Marines and families one step further, the station Joint Public Affairs Office offers training for units desiring to set-up an official social media site and for individual Marines and families to educate them on the potential implications of social media sites.

Much of the information provided was pulled from pre-existing operational security and personal identification information guidance and adapted to the social media realm.

Simple tips include:

- Do not post information if you are unsure if it is authorized for public release or if you don't want it shared.

Osprey squadron's leadership results in MEF-level recognition

CPL. DAVE BEALL
MCAS NEW RIVER

Marine Medium Tiltrotor Squadron 266 from Marine Corps Air Station New River was recently named the recipient of the Lt. Gen. Chesty B. Puller Outstanding Leadership Award (medium unit) for 2010, according to officials from II Marine Expeditionary Force. The award is presented on behalf of Lt. Gen. John M. Paxton Jr., commanding general, II MEF.

The Lt. Gen. Chesty B. Puller Outstanding Leadership Award recognizes II MEF units and commands that epitomize what a top-notch United States Marine Corps unit looks like.

The award is highly prestigious, motivational and a source of great pride. It is awarded to those who have demonstrated a truly superior performance and have made force preservation part of their cultural ethos, according to the award criteria cited in II Marine Expeditionary Force Order 5100.2 Ch. 1.

Thirteen different aspects of a unit or command's superior performance are evaluated during the selection process to include: training, morale, discipline, medical and dental readiness.

The award is presented annually to three separate II MEF commands based on personnel strength. The small unit award is given to a command with up to 200 Marines and Sailors, the medium unit is for units of 201 to 800 Marines and Sailors and the large unit goes to a command with more than 800 personnel.

Members of awarded commands typically receive special privileges and recognition, which may include a commanding general's certificate of commendation, a 96-hour special liberty pass for active duty members and meritorious promotions.

Comments from the Marines of VMM-266 were not available in time for publication of this issue due to their current operations at sea with the 26th Marine Expeditionary Unit. However, officials say the Marines of '266 have received the news and are proud, and eager to get back to physically receive the award.

The squadron is scheduled to return from its deployment with the 26th Marine Expeditionary Unit this May.

Chaplain: Prayer saves dog’s life

CMDR. ROBERT BEEDE
DEPUTY WING CHAPLAIN

A friend of mine, a fellow minister, told me a story about the dog pound in his city. A worker there had the gruesome job of euthanizing unwanted animals. As he walked into the kennel, he told the dog, “You’d better say your prayers!” He watched in amazement as the dog lay on the ground and put its head between its paws. Apparently its previous owner had taught it “how to pray.”

Prayer is important. It is a gift from God to us so that we can talk with him and have a relationship with him. God cares about us. Peter writes, “Cast all your cares upon him, for he cares for you.” (1 Peter 5:7) Give God your worries and problems in prayer.

Prayer is more than just asking God for things, prayer is an attitude. It is an attitude of love as we pray not only for ourselves but as we also pray for others. Prayer helps us to see problems and other people as God sees them. Prayer is where we ask God for help, and ask him to use us to be of help to others.

A moment ago I told you the story of the animal control worker who was supposed to put a dog to sleep. The man had told the dog, “Say your prayers,” and he watched in amazement as the dog lay on the ground and put its head between its paws. What I didn’t tell you is that he told the dog again, “Say your prayers!” and sure enough the dog did the same thing. The worker was so impressed, he kept the dog and didn’t put it to sleep. Let’s learn a lesson from this dog and say our prayers!

How to responsibly buy a new vehicle

CAPT. AARON F. DEBRUIN
LEGAL ASSISTANCE OFFICER

Most people cannot purchase a car with cash and must get a loan to buy a vehicle. There are a number of ways to obtain a loan, but you need to clean up your credit report first. All lenders will look at your credit score and credit report to determine how risky it will be to loan money to you. The riskier you are, the higher the interest rates. To ensure you are getting the best interest rate, you need to correct all the mistakes on your credit report. Go to <http://www.annualcreditreport.com> and obtain a free copy of your credit report. Carefully look the report over to see if there are any old credit accounts you forgot to close or other mistakes. Once you have determined that your report is mistake free, you are now ready to start the car-buying process.

Before you set foot on a dealer’s lot, go to a bank or credit union and see how much you can borrow and at what interest rate. You will be surprised how much lower the interest rate from a bank would be compared to the offer by the dealer. That’s because auto dealers are working with a financing company to get you to accept a high interest rate in order to increase profits. Once the dealer negotiates the loan with you, they sell the loan to the financing company. By going to a bank you can determine what deal is best, and you gain bargaining power and knowledge to negotiate a lower rate with the auto dealer. If the auto dealer cannot match or beat the bank, then finance the car through the bank or credit union.

I bet you think the next step is to go to the dealer? Well, not yet. You still need to check the value of your current vehicle and get an estimate of what it is worth on trade. There are a number of websites that will give you an independent value estimate. I recommend using Kelly Blue Book, Black Book, or NADA. Each resource has an accompanying site online that will help give you an estimate of how much your car is worth.

Alright, you are finally ready to step foot on a car lot. The number one mistake many buyers make is to answer the salesman when he asks, “How much are you willing to spend a month?” Giving the dealer this information means you have lost control of price negotiations before they have started. Instead, focus the negotiations on the price of the vehicle. Your next point of negotiation should be a fair interest rate that is equal to or lower than the quote you received from the bank. Finally, negotiate the trade in value of your current vehicle. Treat these three situations as three separate negotiations. Many dealers will try to lump it all in one negotiation, then add in a lot of fees that negate the value of your trade in.

Be a great American and tell the salesman that you need a day to research the vehicle and to compare the price you received with other comparable vehicles. Go visit other dealers and see if they can give you a better deal. If so, bring that price to the original dealer to see if they will drop the price even more. Your goal is to get the lowest price, so take your time and do not rush into purchasing the vehicle. Before you sign anything, make sure the dealer has the title to the car and is ready to sign it over to you.

Do not purchase from any dealer who will not allow you to take the car to an independent mechanic.

Job Title: Explosive ordnance disposal technician
Unit: Marine Wing Support Squadron 274
Hometown: Bethlehem, Pa.
Date Joined: Aug. 16, 2004

What’s your job?

My job is to respond to any and all explosive hazards that take place here. We’re also training for Afghanistan by getting into more specialized ordnance training.

What’s your favorite aspect of your job?

The best part of our job is the range sweeps. We have to dispose of ordnance on different ranges and it gives us a good chance to learn the ins and outs of our job.

What’s the most challenging part?

Keeping up with our job training on top and the required Marine Corps training is the most challenging aspect of our job because we are always training.

How does your job support the mission of 2nd MAW and MCAS Cherry Point?

We are responsible for any explosive hazard aboard the air station and for the local area.

How does your job differ from garrison to the field?

Usually as soon as we get in country our Marines are dispersed to forward units and eventually they end up on patrols and are responsible for disposing explosive ordnance. So over there we deal with improvised explosive devices for the most part and here we deal with explosive hazards with aircraft for the most part.

MAG-31 flies to Cherry Point, joins in exercise

LANCE CPL. JOSHUA PETTWAY
MCAS Beaufort, S.C.

Multiple 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing squadrons based at Marine Corps Air Station Beaufort, S.C., participated in a large-force exercise to improve their mission capabilities. The LFE incorporated different aircraft including F/A-18 Hornets, KC-130J Hercules and EA-6B Prowlers.

Pilots with Marine Fighter Attack Squadron 115 and VMFA-312 flew to MCAS Cherry Point to complete the exercise Jan. 26 and 27.

“The main point of the event is to improve our overall effectiveness as a Marine Air-Ground Task Force while training with adjacent squadrons like VMFA-312,” said Lt. Col. Danny Johnson, VMFA-115 commanding officer.

The various elements of a MAGTF work together to support and carry out missions and complete various training exercises to prepare for deployments.

“You can’t go in to do a long-range strike unless you have all the moving parts to ensure mission completion,” said Johnson.

According to Johnson, this training is beneficial to VMFA-115 because it will better help the squadron prepare the Marines who lack the experience for their upcoming deployment.

“The training is valuable for the pilots because it gives them their flight qualification and allows everyone refresher training that they will employ in combat,” said Capt. Matthew Gaede, assistant operations officer for VMFA-312.

Every Marine involved in the training evolution received a joint mission brief to ensure that no information was miscommunicated and that everyone understood the objectives and contingency plan.

According to Gaede, a pilot with VMFA-312, multiple pilots received qualifications and the unit also provided four additional aircraft during the exercise.

The Marines were given different scenarios where they had to intercept other aircraft in a specific area of airspace, drop ordnance and get out. During the second day of training different scenarios were included to test the reaction capabilities of the participants.

The training demanded 24 hours of dedication to complete, which included the briefing, flying, firing, debriefing and reviewing the mission’s success. During the exercise the squadrons faced many different factors that they had to overcome.

“One of the most important things we stress is communication,” Johnson said. “Because anything could happen and it is important to relay information, which is why we will have Marines in Beaufort communicating with those in Cherry Point to ensure that everyone is aware of every adjustment.”

There were 20 different aircraft involved in the training and ordnance had to be dropped at specific times and places with no exception.

“The various aircraft all operate differently so it is vital that everyone knows of any changes immediately so they are able to adjust and operate at full capacity,” Johnson said.

VMGR-252 refuels aircraft during large force exercise

LANCE CPL. TYLER J. BOLKEN

Marine Aerial Refueler Transport Squadron 252 Marines took off from Cherry Point Jan. 26-27, aboard one of the squadron’s KC-130Js to refuel F/A-18 Hornets from Marine Corps Air Station Beaufort, S.C., and AV-8B Harriers from Cherry Point’s Marine Attack Squadron 223, as part of a large-force exercise in the Eastern Carolina skies.

During a night refueling mission Jan. 27, 10 aircraft stacked in formations at an altitude of about 18,000 feet in complete darkness behind one of VMGR-252’s KC-130Js, waiting to be refueled.

“Traditionally we don’t have that many aircraft at once,” explained Staff Sgt. Paul Folk, crew chief with VMGR-252 on the night’s flight. “When there are that many aircraft in close vicinity, it can get a little hectic.”

Vision wasn’t an issue though, as all personnel wore night vision goggles.

Folk said a pilot once explained to him what it was like conducting missions in the middle of night – “Scary,” the pilot said as he lifted his NVG’s up, “Not scary,” putting them back over his eyes.

“They’re essential,” said Folk referring to the goggles. “That pilot pretty much summed it up.”

Demonstrating the vision of all involved, the 11 aircraft flew in a near flawless formation like a flock of birds, except at speeds of more than 200 mph.

“We have to fly at our top-end speed,” explained Capt. Justin P. Betz, pilot with VMGR-252 on the night’s flight. “The aircraft we typically refuel have to slow down substantially.”

Once all the aircraft are in place, the KC-130J releases its two refueling hoses, one off of each wing, for the receiving aircraft to begin refueling.

Once the refueling starts, communication plays a key role in completing the mission. It also helps that the all the pilots and crewmembers work from the same standard operating procedures.

“We use a system in which we work the aircraft left to right, low to high,” Folk explained about the aircraft waiting for fuel. “The system alleviates people from flying all over the place.”

When the aircraft come in, they join in a formation behind the KC-130J on the lower left, where they wait to receive fuel. Once they’ve been refueled, they go up and to the right of the KC-130J until all aircraft are refueled.

Each night’s refueling missions on the Jan. 26-27 flights lasted about four hours.

“It just gets busier,” said Betz. “The more receivers there are, the less fuel we’re able to give each one because the fuel we’re using to refuel is the same fuel we’re burning. Not to downplay the danger of it, but it is a mission we do often and it is what we’re most professional at.”

The KC-130J gave out over 42,000 pounds of fuel that night, about 4,000 pounds of fuel per aircraft.

“It was a rare opportunity to have 10 aircraft behind,” Folk said. “It was good training for our younger crewmembers.”

Aerial refueling facts

- Refueling can be conducted at altitudes as low as 500 feet and as high as 33,000 feet.
- Colder temperatures allow refueling at higher altitudes, whereas hotter temperatures prevent going up further.
- A KC-130J Hercules can give out 42,000 to 46,000 pounds of fuel in a single flight.

If the dealer tries to talk you out of this or refuses to allow you to take it to a mechanic, the dealer has something to hide and you should leave the lot immediately. Still obtain a vehicle history report even if your independent mechanic says there is nothing wrong with the vehicle.

The best time to purchase a vehicle is at the end of the month when salespeople are trying to reach their quotas. Winter is also a great time to buy because sales are generally slower, causing dealerships to lower prices. If possible, do not buy a car in March, April or May. This is the time of year when Americans receive their income tax returns. Dealers are less willing to budge on price since more people are looking to buy a car during these months.

Following the suggestions within this article will assist you in your negotiations and reduce the likelihood of buyer’s remorse in the event that you do purchase a vehicle. around here and gave them something to experience, so they can get an idea of what’s really out there and what they’re really supporting. Other IPAC Marines start believing that Marines are just numbers. We believe that they’re Marines and do important things.”

Sgt. Jvictor S. Mastronardi II, improved moving target simulator chief also agrees that getting the IPAC Marines out of their everyday workspace was a good idea.

“I thought it was good that they got to come in here and see something they normally wouldn’t see,” said Mastronardi. “It was good to show them that with training, they could work outside their military occupational specialty. I would like to see more cross-training with other units.”

Mastronardi said cross-training gives Marines a broader perspective of what the Marine Corps does as a whole, and it helps the Marines understand that every job in the Corps is essential.

SOCIAL MEDIA from page A1

- Do not post information about anyone other than yourself, and be vague about the personal information you do choose to share on the internet.
- Do not “friend” anyone online unless you have physically shaken their hand and trust them.
- If you see a “friend” and/or “follower” on your profile that you do not know, remove them immediately.
- Service members must remember that they are subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice, which applies to their conduct online as well as at work.

To help combat online dangers and keep 2nd MAW and MCAS Cherry Point families safe, The Windsock will run regular tips to ensure units, service members, civilian personnel and families are familiar with safe social media practices.

For additional information on Marine Corps guidance regarding social media, visit the website at <http://www.marines.mil/usmc/Pages/SocialMedia.aspx> or contact the 2nd MAW/MCAS Cherry Point Joint Public Affairs Office at 466-5895.

And just like that, Weiland contemplated until he began to suspiciously go about his business for a few days – that is until one particular day, when he hung up the phone.

“What time is he going to be here,” his father, Norm, said, in reference to a recruiter. “They didn’t have a clue that I was considering it,” Weiland said. He continued to say that his father was more than proud of him for joining the military, but he wanted to ensure that he was doing it for the right reasons.

“He told me to find a skill that would follow me for the rest of my life,” Weiland continued. “And also to not make the same mistake he did.”

Norm Weiland enlisted in the Marine Corps in 1965, serving as a KY-8 radio technician and an Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 26 door gunner.

Stationed at Marine Corps Base Camp Pendleton, Calif., multiple locations in Vietnam, and Marine Corps Recruit Depot San Diego, Norm traveled and experienced quite a bit in his four years.

“He never really told me to join or expected me to join; it’s always what I’ve wanted to do,” Weiland said. “I remember when I was nine or 10 seeing my dad’s box of medals, and I was like a kid in a candy store. It was definitely a determining factor.”

In 1996 destiny called and Weiland was assigned to his first duty station, Marine Tactical Electronic Warfare Squadron 4, as an EA-6B Prowler aircraft technician, at the age of 19.

Weiland deployed three times during his first enlistment, twice to Aviano Air Base, Italy, in support of Operation Deliberate Guard and Operation Allied Force and once to Japan.

As a sergeant in the Marine Corps and with time dwindling away on his first term, Weiland had an important decision to make and, in turn, decided to walk away from the Corps and began college.

“I didn’t like what I was studying and realized the Corps was a better fit for me, but I knew if I came back in that I probably wouldn’t be an noncommissioned officer, so I had to do something different,” he said. “So I did some research, talked to my dad quite a bit, and decided on the platoon leaders course in 2003.”

Commissioned as a 2nd Lieutenant in 2006 with a degree in physical geography from the University of Wisconsin, Weiland headed to flight school.

“I was sitting there going through the numbers with a few of my buddies at flight school, and I realized there was a decent chance for me to go to Marine Aircraft Group 14 again.”

And again, as fate would have it, Weiland found himself assigned to VMAQ-4, for the second time but this time as an officer.

“I thought it was a joke at first, but it wasn’t and it started to sink in like I never left in the first place,” he continued. “I thought sarcastically to myself, ‘oh I’m back at this place again.’”

His first time with the Seahawks was as a Prowler electrician, and the second time as an electronic countermeasures officer. How can you beat that?

“I spent four years of my life maintaining the aircraft when all I wanted to do was see what it is like to fly in it,” he said. “Then I realized I had to go through flight school just for that.”

Thirteen years after he first stepped into the VMAQ-4 hangar, he returned to see several familiar, albeit older, faces.

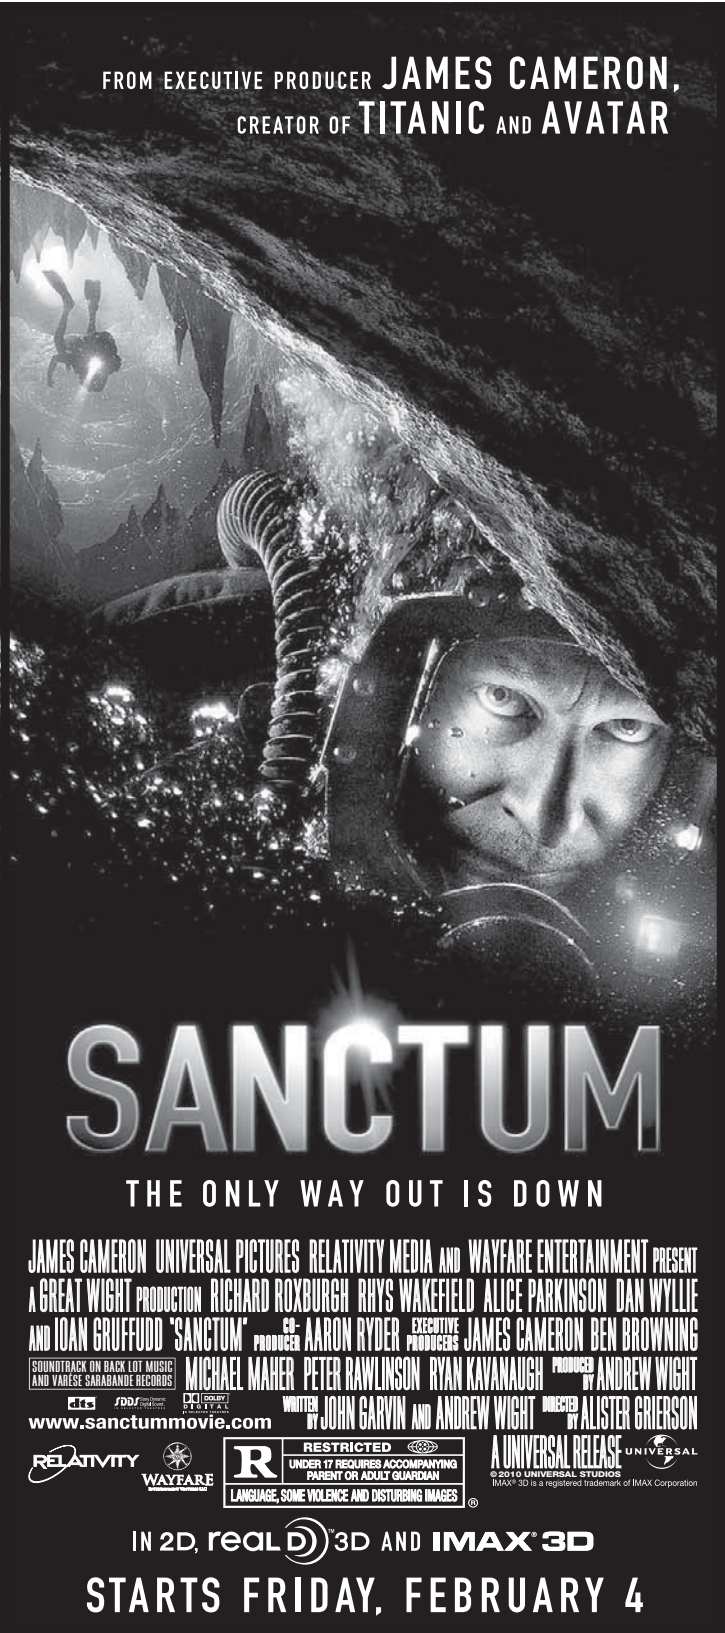

Take Staff Sgt. Daen J. Glover for example. “Capt. Weiland was always someone I looked up to and tried to emulate when he was enlisted,” said Glover, who has known Weiland for 12 years and worked with him while he was enlisted.

“I was confused when he got out as a sergeant and went to college because he was an outstanding Marine,” Glover continued. “But I’m glad he decided to come back, and now both our squadron and the Marine Corps are better off with a Marine of his caliber.”

According to Weiland, his life is prosperous as he is happily married to his wife Neva; has three children – Brandon, Aidon and Elizabeth; a unit full of old work buddies; a profession that allows him to fly and a ton of new, young Marines.

“I definitely have a unique perspective of what it is to be an enlisted Marine,” Weiland added. “It has benefitted me as an officer, and really all you need to do is think about it like a lance corporal does and you’ll get the job done.”

Lance Cpl.'s Matthew S. Smith, left, and Angel D. Berges, right, enjoy the National Hockey League All-Star Weekend opening concert in Raleigh, N.C., Jan. 28. Cherry Point's Single Marine Program offers trips specifically for single and unaccompanied Marines to distant events like this.

Marines rock with 3 Doors Down

LANCE CPL. SCOTT L. TOMASZYCKI
MCAS CHERRY POINT

The night was dark as a crowd huddled together in the cold waiting patiently for the next act. Dark figures moved about on stage, gathering around the drums in center stage. The lights went up and the band 3 Doors Down ran to the edge of the stage performing for thousands of cheering fans.

The Cherry Point Single Marine Program took participants to the Raleigh Amphitheater in Raleigh, N.C., to view the opening concert of the National Hockey League's All-Star Weekend Jan. 28.

Thousands of people came to watch performances by The Zambonis, The Performing Assets, 3 Doors Down and a fireworks finale. While the Marines may have been few in numbers, the bands welcomed them as being more than just fans and faces in the crowd.

"I think the Marine Corps is one of the greatest things in this country," said Dave Schneider, The Zambonis' lead singer and guitarist. "They're helping us, serving us just doing their duties. It's an honor to play for them."

The Marines enjoyed the opportunity to enjoy some fun and entertainment outside of the local area around Marine Corps Air Station Cherry Point.

"The Single Marine Program gives us an opportunity to get off the base," said Lance Cpl. Matthew S. Smith, an electronic countermeasures technician with Marine Aviation Logistics Squadron 14. "It gives us the freedom to get out of the barracks. I didn't know about the concert until I got the e-mail from the Single Marine Program, so if it weren't for them I wouldn't have been able to go."

The Single Marine Program opens the door for Marines to enjoy events out of the ordinary. The program will also sponsor trips to Busch Gardens, Williamsburg, Va., and to see the professional basketball organization the Charlotte Bobcats in the near future.

Brad Arnold, left, and Todd Harrell, right, of 3 Doors Down play new music for thousands of hockey fans in Raleigh, N.C., for the National Hockey League's All-Star Weekend Jan. 28. The band played as the feature act of the three-band concert.

"The Single Marine Program is meant to improve the quality of life for Marines and Sailors on the base by providing recreational activities," said Nicole A. Hall, a Single Marine Program recreation assistant. "With events such as these, it gives them the opportunity to not only have a change of scenery, but to also have a great time."

Brad Arnold of 3 Doors Down sings for a crowd that includes participants of Cherry Point's Single Marine Program in Raleigh, N.C., Jan. 28. The Single Marine Program will take more trips in the near future to places such as Busch Gardens, Williamsburg, Va., and to see the Charlotte Bobcats professional basketball organization.

Thousands gather to hear the band 3 Doors Down play in the opening concert for the National Hockey League All-Star Weekend in Raleigh, N.C., Jan. 28. Rock music was played by The Zambonis, The Performing Assets and 3 Doors Down.

Ways to retrieve tax returns

SPECIAL TO THE WINDSOCK
IRS.gov

There are two easy and convenient options for obtaining free copies of federal tax return information – tax return transcripts and tax account transcripts – by phone or by mail.

A tax return transcript shows most line items from the tax return (Form 1040,1040A or 1040EZ) as it was originally filed, including any accompanying forms and schedules. It does not reflect any changes made after the return was filed.

In many cases, a return transcript will meet the requirements of lending institutions such as those offering mortgages and student loans.

Taxpayers should receive a tax return transcript within 10 working days from the time the IRS receives the request.

A tax account transcript shows any later adjustments either the taxpayer or the IRS made after the tax return was filed. This transcript shows basic data, including marital status, type of return filed, adjusted gross income and taxable income.

The IRS does not charge a fee for transcripts, which are available for the current and past three years.

Allow 30 calendar days for delivery of a tax account transcript.

To request either transcript:

- Phone: Call (800) 829-1040 and follow the prompts in the recorded message.

- Mail: Complete IRS Form 4506-T, Request for Transcript of Tax Return.

If you still need an actual copy of a previously processed tax return, it will cost $57 per tax year and take much longer. Complete Form 4506, Request for Copy of Tax Form, and mail it to the IRS address listed on the form for one’s area.

Please allow 60 days for actual copies of the return. Copies are generally available for the current and past six years.

Forms 4506-T and 4506 can be found on the IRS Web site at <http://www.irs.gov> or by calling the IRS forms and publications order line at (800) 829-3676.

FRC East unveils new facility

SPECIAL TO THE WINDSOCK
FLEET READINESS CENTER EAST

Fleet Readiness Center East celebrated the opening of the $17.5 million Engineering Product Support Facility, Dec. 14. North Carolina Gov. Beverly Perdue joined FRC East Commanding Officer Col. L. Scott Loch and NAVAIR Assistant Commander for Research and Engineering Rear Adm. Randy Mahr in a ribbon cutting ceremony for the new building. Several federal, state, and local officials were on hand, as were dozens of FRC East employees and invited guests.

“Today we gather together to celebrate the completion of this facility, and to mark its beginning as a tool that will help deliver readiness to our warfighters,” Loch said. “For decades to come, this building will house the engineers and logisticians who will deliver solutions to our warfighters, keeping our forces ready to answer the nation’s call.”

The two-story facility adds nearly 36,000 square feet of capability to the depot, including a 5,000 square-foot engineering investigative high bay that allows full scale engineering simulations for the V-22, a telecommunications switch center, administrative office spaces and engineering laboratories equipped to accommodate new V-22 automated test requirements. It also reduces the depot’s reliance on leased facilities by consolidating 200 engineers and logisticians who were previously in offices scattered across Cherry Point and Havelock, and is the first building in a plan that will convert a former military housing area off N.C. 101 into a sprawling aviation industrial complex.

Employees relocated to the new facility work on rotary and fixed-wing aircraft platforms, including the V-22, C-130, AV-8, H-1, H-46, H-53 and H-60. The building also houses several fleet support teams, plus the teams who work on flight controls, structures, aircrew evacuation, and other systems.

Perdue, who has been a regular visitor to FRC East since her days as a state senator, said the work done aboard the depot is “in-credibly important,” and labeled the new facility as “right for America.” The governor added she believes a sister facility will also be right for America, and told those in attendance, “Anytime something good happens aboard this base, something good happens for North Carolina.”

The admiral said the new facility will mean a lot to the military men and women currently overseas and those who will be sent there in the future. He said the men and women at FRC East understand that everything they do is to support those serving in Iraq and Afghanistan, and thanked them for their contributions.

“Your work here at Cherry Point speaks for itself,” Mahr said. “The legacy that the men and women who are working here now and their predecessors have built, has given confidence that this building will be here far into the future ... The work you do cannot be accomplished anywhere else.”

FRC East Research and Engineering Group Head Chris Holder said the ribbon cutting ceremony marked the formal beginning of a better consolidated FST, Engineering, Logistics, and Program Management support to the Fleet and FRC East production.

“This building will provide a professional environment for collaboration and engineering investigations and CASS (Consolidated Automated Support Systems) support,” he said. The new Engineering Product Support Facility is the command’s first Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design project.

LEED is an internationally recognized green building certification. Some of the buildings LEED’s features include high efficiency heat pump and HVAC system, low-flow fixtures in restrooms, 30 percent of building materials recycled or post-consumer products, 75 percent of construction debris recycled, photovoltaic (solar) panels provide 23 percent of building’s energy, low-emissions glass controls heat loss and heat loading through all exterior windows

“SEASON OF THE WITCH” (PG-13)

“Season of the Witch” is a supernatural medieval action adventure.

The tale centers on two medieval knights who undertake a mission pitting them against a devious witch and making them the last hope for the world against an ancient and dark force.

Nicolas Cage (“National Treasure,” “Knowing,” “Ghostrider”) stars as Behem, a 14th century knight, a devout Christian and superb fighter, who has just returned home with his close friend after decades of fighting as crusaders in the Holy Army.

Along with his battle friend Felson, played by Ron Perlman (“Hellboy,” “Battle of Terra”), they find their world destroyed by the Black Plague.

The elders of the church are convinced that a girl accused of sorcery, played by newcomer Claire Foy, is cursed and responsible for the devastation.

They command the two knights to transport the strange girl to a remote monastery where monks will perform an ancient ritual to rid her of her powers.

Behem and Felson embark on a harrowing, action-filled journey that will test their strength and courage as they discover the girl’s dark secret.

They soon find themselves battling a terrifyingly powerful force that will determine the fate of the world.

Also starring are Stephen Campbell Moore (“The Bank Job”) as Debelzaq; Ulrich Thomsen (“The International”) as Eckhart; Stephen Graham (“Inkheart”) as Hagamar; and Christopher Lee (“Alice in Wonderland”) as Cardinal D’Ambroise.

Dominic Sena (“Whiteout,” “Gone in 60 Seconds,” “Swordfish”) appears to have thrown this film together with little thought and preparation.

“Season of the Witch” is a fast-moving action film that has little to offer and looks more like a video game.

“THE KING’S SPEECH” (R)

“The King’s Speech” is a comedic drama and a historical account.

The story chronicles the travails of King George VI, who overcame a life-long stammer with the help of an excellent speech therapist.

Colin Firth (“Single Man,” “Easy Virtue,” “Mamma Mia!” “Bridget Jones’ Diary”)

stars as George VI, also known as Bertie, who reluctantly takes the throne of England when his brother, Edward, abdicates in 1936.

After the death of his father King George V, played by Michael Gambon (“The Book of Eli”) and the scandalous abdication of King Edward VIII, played by Guy Pearce (“The Hurtlocker”), Bertie is suddenly crowned the new king of England.

The unprepared king, who has suffered from a speech impediment all his life, turns to a radical speech therapist to help overcome his nervous stutter.

Geoffrey Rush (“Pirates of the Caribbean” series) stars as Lionel Logue, King George’s quirky speech therapist.

After a rough start, the two become involved in an unorthodox method of treatment and eventually forge a life-long friendship.

Helena Bonham Carter (“Alice in Wonderland,” “Harry Potter” series) co-stars as Queen Elizabeth, the wife of King George VI.

Jennifer Ehle (“Pride and Glory”) plays Myrtle Logue, the wife of Lionel.

With the help of Logue, the support of his family, and his government, including Winston Churchill, played by Timothy Spall (“Alice in Wonderland”), the King overcomes his stammer and delivers a radio-address inspiring his people and uniting a country in time of World War II.

Tom Hooper (“The Damned United,” “Red Dust”), who is better know for his television miniseries “Elizabeth I” and “John Adams,” directed this biopic from a screenplay by David Seidler (“The King and I”) that is based on the true story of King George VI following the Royal Monarch’s quest to find his voice.

Colin firth’s masterful and charming performance is extremely convincing, brilliantly delivered with the help of an outstanding supporting cast.

“The King’s Speech” is a stylish period drama and one of the year’s best movies. It is story of love and friendship and is an inspiring and delightful film to watch that also includes a terrific history lesson.
