Wing Operations Center offers critical training opportunities

The 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing's recent large force exercise, Exercise MAILED FIST 1-11, breathed life into a brand new tool that leaders say will redefine the way 2nd MAW conducts training and local operations.

The Wing Operations Center, a windowless room with rows of work stations, a panel of large, wall-mounted monitors and, sometimes, an air of excited anticipation, offers a command and control nucleus for wing activity during major operational events.

From the WOC, dozens of attentive Marines monitor occasionally hectic and elaborate missions and training events, keeping a close eye on everything from radar and weather patterns to video feeds and maps.

"It's a place where we can move the chess pieces across the operational spectrum," said Lt. Col. Martin J. Forrest IV, the current operations officer for 2nd MAW.

Forrest clearly sees the opportunities provided by the WOC.

"It will allow us to train and execute large-force exercises much more realistically," he said.

Lt. Col. Matthew R. McGath, who served as the senior watch officer for the WOC during MAILED FIST, said that several times during the exercise, the existence of the WOC offered unique perspective or training opportunities that otherwise would have been lost.

"The WOC allows coordination. It's a big situational awareness tool and the wing's current operations will really use it more often," McGath said.

Forrest said having the WOC available for training exercises allows officers to learn how a command and control environment operates.

"For many of the young officers here, this is their first exposure to a tactical air command center," said Forrest. "This place will increase their confidence and understanding while allowing them to gel as a team and learn to execute command and control."

Prowlers serve MAW for more than 30 years

Communications can win or lose wars. During World War II, American code breakers broke the Japanese naval codes, gaining enough intelligence to contribute to the victory in the Battle of Midway. In the European theater, code breakers deciphered the German's Enigma code, leading to a flawlessly executed deception campaign culminating in the successful landing at Normandy.

With new methods of communication developing all the time, the United States military had every intention of attacking enemy communications effectively while maintaining proper communications internally. A proper platform for electronic warfare had to be mobile and transmit from a high location. The newly invented jet fit the bill, and Marine squadrons would take the job.

"It started in Vietnam with Lt. Gen. Philip D. Shutler, who was one of the programmers at D.C. Aviation and they found a need for jamming aircraft to support the bombers going into Vietnam from surface-to-air threats," said Col. Philip J. Zimmerman, commanding officer of Marine Corps Air Station Cherry Point and Prowler electronic countermeasures officer. "So they took an A-6 and modified it, becoming the EA-6A with receivers and jamming pods on it. They found it to become effective, and it grew into a program of its own. The EA-6B was developed in the early 70s and from there they started fielding it."

In 1978, the EA-6B Prowler became the electronic warfare platform of the Marine Corps. With the Prowler, the Marine Corps hoped to pass beyond just jamming enemy radar and gain control over the "electromagnetic spectrum," or the medium through which modern militaries communicate.

"The Prowlers essentially work in the electromagnetic spectrum, and within that realm, there is a wide variety of things that we can touch, influence or manage the battlefield in some way, shape or form," said Maj. Roderick D. Capili, the executive officer of Marine Tactical Electronic Warfare Squadron 2. "We can't say specifically what we do, but a lot of it involves hindering the enemy's abilities to conduct a cohesive war front. We disrupt their ability to organize and disrupt their ability to be effective with command and control functions on the battlefield."

On every deployment, VMAQ squadrons would take on this role during multiple training operations and several combat deployments, including the first and second Persian Gulf Wars and the war in Afghanistan.

The EA-6B was developed from the EA-6A Intruder and has been flying for more than 30 years in the Marine Corps. The main role it was built for was countering enemy radar installations to prevent effective anti-aircraft fire or fighter coordination against American aircraft.

The age of the aircraft, however, may soon be catching up to it.

"The Prowler has been in existence in the Marine Corps since at least the mid-70s," said Capili. "We're celebrating 36 years of the EA-6B in the Marine Corps July 1,

Israeli Air Force looks at MV-22 capabilities

MCAS NEW RIVER PUBLIC AFFAIRS

For the second time in two months, a team from the Israeli Air Force visited 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing units at Marine Corps Air Station New River to evaluate the Marine Corps' MV-22 Osprey, and aircraft that the Israelis, according to some reports, see as a possible platform for search and rescue operations, and for covert special operations.

The first IAF visit, May 16-26, was conducted by Lt. Col. Nimrod Golan, a UH-60 Blackhawk helicopter pilot, and Lt. Col. Avi Carmeli, a CH-53 Sea Stallion helicopter pilot and Navy graduate test pilot, both with the Israeli Air Force. That was followed June 13-23 by a seven-man team led by Golan and Carmeli.

"An invitation came from the Marines to the Israeli Air Force to explore this aircraft and though currently, there is no procurement process on the table, we were very happy to follow this invitation," said Golan. "We are looking at the aircraft, trying to understand how the Osprey can contribute to our operational requirements and also have an understanding of its implementation. In addition, this is a great opportunity to enhance our relationship and cooperation with the Marines."

The Workhorse of the Wing, Marine Wing Support Squadron 271, received a new commanding officer June 30 outside the squadron's engineer facility.

Lt. Col. Paul D. Baker relinquished command to Lt. Col. Paul A. Rosenbloom after 18 months of command. Baker took over the squadron while it was deployed in Iraq in 2010 and saw the squadron through the end of its combat deployment and a deployment to South America to support humanitarian efforts.

You expertly managed one of the largest squadrons in the wing as they support more than 30 operations, maintained readiness for deployment, and successfully supported 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing daily requirements," said Maj. Gen. Jon M. Davis, commanding general of 2nd MAW, in a statement for Baker. "You took the majority of your squadron and formed a special-purpose Marine Air-Ground Task Force and deployed to South America for military-to-military exchanges that would benefit the armed forces for years to come. Under your command, Marine Wing Support Squadron 271 has truly been the Workhorse

Be aware of phishing

CAPT. KEVIN HOFFMAN

JOINT LAW CENTER

Phishing is a scam which attempts to gain useful financial information from a victim by pretending to be a legitimate organization. If the phishing attempt is successful, the financial information is then used to make purchases or siphon money out of accounts before the victim realizes what happened.

Recently, there was a widespread phishing scam in eastern North Carolina which targeted Verizon and Gateway Bank customers. A mass text sent from the scammer stated, "Gateway Bank Alert, your card starting with 4138 has been deactivated."

Every debit/credit card issued by Gateway Bank begins with 4138 which made the text message seemingly apply to all Gateway Bank Customers. The text went on to provide a number for the message recipients to call in order to remedy the deactivation.

Upon dialing the number a recording requested the caller's full 16 digit account number, expiration date, and three-digit security pin. Once all of the information was received the recording stopped and the call ended. Obviously this text did not come from Gateway Bank, but thus far the bank is estimated to have lost $80,000 as a result.

Phishing can take the form of an email, text message, letter in the mail, or even a telephone solicitation. To avoid becoming victims of phishing, please understand the following:

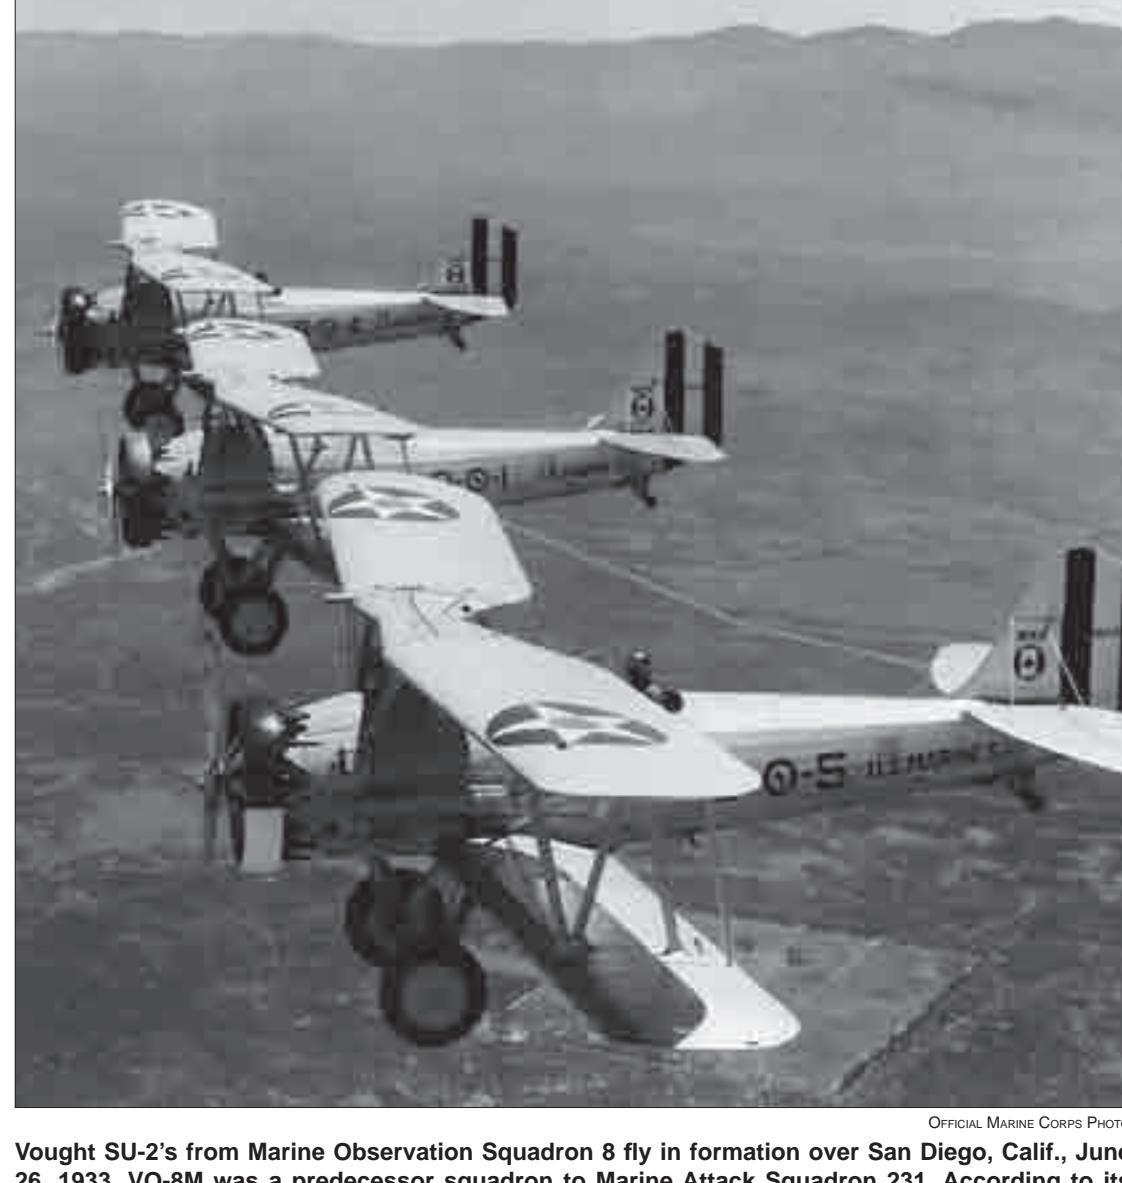

- Banks, service providers, credit card companies, and other financial institutions will never contact you to verify your account information with them – they already know your account information.

- If you are contacted by what you believe to be a legitimate financial institution; and they are requesting that you take some sort of action, use the customer service number provided on your monthly statement or on that financial institution's website.

- Limit the amount of personal information you give out. Many do not realize that when you sign up to win a free car in the mall, your contact information is sold by whoever is running the prize giveaway. Also, if you are ever given the option to disallow a company from sharing your information with third parties; doing so reduces unnecessary release of private information.

If you have questions about phishing or other legal assistance issues, contact Legal Assistance or visit our office located at the Joint Law Center, Building 219. Walk-ins are seen daily starting at 7:30 a.m.

Chaplain: Getting back at enemies

CMDR. DAVID SHIRK

2ND MAW

Have you ever known someone, or know someone now that you just cannot get along with? No matter how hard you try or what you do this person just simply rubs you the wrong way and it seems every interaction is negative and every conversation is an argument.

What do you do? Well for these relationships I have a strategy that just might help. I refer to it as my three "Bs" of a bad relationship. They are: "B" polite, "B" civil and "B" gone.

B Polite:

Being polite refers to the way you should speak with that person. In the words that you use, in the tone of voice or even in your body language there is no reason to be rude. The book of Psalms reads: "A gentle answer turns away rage, but a harsh word stirs up anger." Being rude does nothing but make the situation ugly, and even worse, it may make you look like them.

B Civil:

Being civil refers to the way you treat someone. Wanting the best for that person, helping that person out when you can, and not allowing others to bash that person goes a long way in showing that you are not only the bigger person but you are a person of character and honor. In the book of Proverbs it says: "If your enemy is hungry, give him food to eat; if he is thirsty, give him water to drink. In doing this, you will heap burning coals on his head, and the Lord will reward you." This is the scriptures' way of saying, if you really want to get back at that person for what they have done, be nice to them, which will get them.

B Gone:

Being gone is really saying keep all your interactions with that person as brief as possible. The longer the conversation or the joint activity goes on the more likely there will be an argument or for a bad situation to develop. Being brief will let that person know you have something better to do than argue with them.

Following these three "Bs", whether the relationship is personal or professional, will go a long way to bringing peace to your life. You can not change the other person, or maybe even the way you feel about the other person, but how you deal with that other person can limit the negative effect that he/she has on your life.

Sunburn safety tips

SPECIAL TO THE WINDSOCK

NAVAL SAFETY CENTER

- Use a sunscreen with a Sun Protection Factor (SPF) of at least 15.
- Some types are waterproof, but even so, you should reapply the sunscreen every two hours.
- Use sunscreen on cloudy days, too.
- It may be slightly uncomfortable in the heat, but you should wear a long-sleeved shirt and long pants.
- Also put on a hat with a large brim and sunglasses.
- If you have a choice, stay in the shade. Beach umbrellas will protect you from some of the sun exposure.
- Remember that children's skin is even more sensitive than yours. They can start wearing sunscreen by the time they are six months old. Minimize their exposure.
- Avoid tanning parlors.
- The sun is strongest between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Hit the beach early, use the main part of the day for other activities, then go back later in the afternoon.

If you get sunburned

- Do not scrub your skin or shave your skin. Use a soft towel and pat your skin dry.
- Use a sunburn remedy containing aloe vera.
- Stay out of the sun. If the sunburn is severe or you are blistering, feel faint or nauseous, see a doctor immediately.

CPL. MATTHEW L. CHENEYJob Title: Water support technicianUnit: MWSS-274Hometown: Crescent City, Calif.Date Joined: Oct. 1, 2008What's your job?

We supply water to Marines in country and also here in the states on any kind of field operation or humanitarian mission. We can purify salt water, brackish water, and water contaminated by nuclear, biological or chemical materials.

What's your favorite aspect of your job?

My favorite aspect of the job is being able to see the change from reject water into clean drinking water and being able to taste it and see it and know I was able to make that change.

What's the most challenging part?

The most challenging part of my job is probably doing corrective maintenance on the gear out there. There's so much mechanics that go into it from pneumatic valves to pressure sensors and temperature sensors.

How does your job support the mission of 2nd MAW and MCAS Cherry Point?

We can support 2nd MAW in a variety of ways. One, with providing clean drinking water. We can also support the air wing by providing water for the internal systems of some aircraft.

Marine chefs heat up cooking competition

MCAS CHERRY POINT

Three Marines slaved over hot stoves and boiling pots for several hours preparing fully-flavored perfect meals. With utensils at hand, the Marines were able to cook up individual meals that looked appealing to the eye and captivated three judges taste buds.

Food service specialists battled in the kitchen, whipping up savory meals to be named the chef of the quarter at the Cherry Point mess hall June 23. The competitors were judged on their preparation, presentation and overall taste of their food.

Cpl. Gary E. Havner with Marine Wing Support Squadron 271 won the competition with a meal of shrimp, calico corn and pineapple crunch for dessert. Havner is also scheduled to compete in the annual chef of the year competition.

"It feels great to win a competition," said Havner. "When I enter into a competition, I give it everything I have. The chef of the quarter competition exists to bring out potential from our Marines. If they signed up to be a food service specialist, then they must have some kind of a passion for food."

Though Havner won the overall competition, the judges facial expressions showed they were content with each meal.

"Overall, I think that the food was pretty good," said Gunnery Sgt. Timothy J. Lindeman, the acting Engineer Company first sergeant for MWSS-274. "There were certain aspects of this dessert or that side dish that could have been better. I think the toughest time they had was the rice, making it taste good and not bland. I would have eaten all of that food any day of the week."

Pfc. Brandon M. Bower, a food service specialist with Headquarters and Headquarters Squadron, took second place in this quarter's competition, which was his first time being a contestant in chef of the quarter. Bower said this competition will help him in future competitions.

"I just took it as a learning experience because I'm new here," said Bower. "I just go with the flow and learn as I go. It's very important to know the job; we can't risk putting raw food out. We make sure that the food people eat is safe."

Regardless of rank, every Marine needs to eat. Cooks fill an important role on the air station by feeding the Marines and Sailors of Cherry Point. Without sustenance, a force cannot fight.

"The role of cooks in the military is (to feed the service members) and everyone needs to eat," said Lance Cpl. Adam Valentin the third contestant in the competition from H&HS. "We're there to lend a helping hand to all of the armed forces that need to be fed, so they can carry out their mission. This competition shows the importance of our role and gives recognition to Marines who may deserve a little more by getting tasked to units where they can serve and make more of a difference (like the mess hall)."

Military intelligence Marines speak on recent accomplishments

STAFF SGT. CHRISTOPHER FLURRY

2ND MAW (Fwd.)

CAMP LEATHERNECK, Afghanistan – New software now enables the Marine Corps intelligence analysts to more quickly survey a suspected insurgent's past activity and social ties, with the goal of providing a more accurate forecast of what he may do in the future, explained Cpl. Oscar Machuca, an intelligence analyst for the 2nd Marine Aircraft Wing (Forward).

"We can more easily recreate historical events so that we can better make decisions about the future," said Machuca, a Pecos, Texas, native. "It's able to link what they've done. It's able to link criminal activity. I try not to make assumptions, I make assessments."

The assessments Machuca and the other aircraft wing intelligence analysts make go to help pilots in determining the threat of a particular location before they fly there. Machuca said he typically spends his time analyzing helicopter landing zones so that aircrews are aware of any insurgent activity that may be going on at any given time.

"It's important (the pilots) know where the biggest threat is," said Machuca. "That way they know if they'll need escorts, or if it's a more secure location."

Machuca said the intelligence products the Marines prepare are provided to the squadrons supporting the aircraft wing for various missions, from close-air support to troop insertions and extractions.

"When they rely on us, they're putting the pilots' lives in our hands," said Sgt. John Panakal, an intelligence analyst with 2nd MAW (Fwd.), and a native of Miami. "That's a good thing, because that's what we're here for."

Additionally, based on the data they acquire and analyze using the new software, the military intelligence Marines are also able to assist combined ground and air forces in southwestern Afghanistan in pinpointing, and neutralizing, enemy threats.

"Over the past month, we were able to take out a major threat, based on our assessments," said Machuca, who like most of the aircraft wing's intelligence Marines is deployed to Camp Leatherneck from Marine Corps Air Station Cherry Point, N.C.

The incident, according to Gunnery Sgt. Moises Vilca, concerned removing a weapon from insurgent hands, which could have been detrimental to aircraft, Marines, and their Afghan and coalition partners operating in Afghanistan's Helmand province.

"We're responsible for that Marine, for that (private first class), and for keeping him alive," he said.

Vilca, an intelligence analyst chief with 2nd MAW (Fwd.), said neutralizing the threat was a combined effort of Marines aviators, ground troops, and the intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance capabilities of unmanned aerial vehicles.

"Fusing – it was successful because of the coordination of ground, air and ISR assets," said Vilca, who is also a Miami native.

The weapon's position was tracked by both ground troops and UAVs, and it was destroyed by the precision-guided bombs of a Marine Corps attack jet.

Vilca said in addition to working closely with Marines on the ground, he sees value in giving the aircraft wing's analysts experience with ground units. So instead of relying only on modern techniques of intelligence collation, the Marines also travel to the various areas they support to see those locations first hand.

"Going to ground, it helps you to have a new perspective," said Machuca, who recently spent time in Kajaki with Marines operating there.

"It's one thing to read about it, it's another thing to meet that person in charge of the battlespace," said Vilca, who is on his fifth deployment, having four previous tours in Iraq. "That's where the COIN (counter-insurgency) is right now, on the ground level, on the company level."

In addition to working in close concert with other Marines both in the air and on the ground, the 2nd MAW (Fwd.) analysts said they also must work hand-in-hand across Afghanistan with other NATO International Security Assistance Force partners.

"When we have the extra coordination and intelligence, it makes us much more effective," said Vilca. "Working together helps in the overall mission of the coalition."

That overall mission, Vilca said, is to help create a safer, more stable home for the people of Afghanistan.

"To remove insurgents off the battlefield and protect the civilian population," Vilca said. "That is one less bad guy they have to worry about. It's about letting people live normal lives."

AV-8B maintenance trainer upgrades delivered early

NAVAL AIR SYSTEMS COMMAND

NAVAL AIR SYSTEMS COMMAND PATUXENT RIVER, Md. – Naval Aviation Training Systems Program Office, PMA-205, here, in cooperation with Naval Air Warfare Center, Training Systems Division (NAWCTSD), Orlando, Fla., upgraded three AV-8B Harrier II Plus maintenance trainers at Marine Corps Air Station Cherry Point, N.C., in May.

Each trainer was returned to “ready for training” status approximately four weeks early – with the delivery of the third device, the upgrades were completed three months ahead of schedule – and, upon testing, met all requirements, according to Brian Barnhill, the AV-8B deputy integrated product team lead, PMA-205.

The AV-8B trainers, which are physical mock-ups of the Harrier II Plus aircraft, teach Marine Corps maintainer students how to troubleshoot and repair a host of aircraft malfunctions. The devices can recreate almost any maintenance scenario maintainers may experience in the fleet.

“Being able to deliver these three trainers to the fleet a month early apiece, and without any issues during testing, is a significant achievement,” said Lt. Col. Scott Harris, Marine Corps deputy program manager for naval training systems, PMA-205.

The upgrades resulted in the configuration of each device being fully concurrent with the operational aircraft, emulating capabilities the trainee will see when they arrive at their first squadron. The upgrades will free up the actual aircraft for other uses, and will focus the maintenance training in the squadron.

Barnhill said to minimize disruption of training, the Marine Corps unit requested that no two trainers be taken down at the same time for upgrade work. This resulted in the contract requiring CymSTAR to work extremely irregular schedules. Despite this, CymSTAR was able to deliver quality training products on cost and nearly three months ahead of schedule.

2011; it's becoming a tired aircraft. The cost of maintenance and the cost of upkeep are becoming highly impaired."

The new F-35B will be expected to take over many of the same jobs the Prowler is capable of undertaking. In past operations, the Prowler would support the fighter aircraft. The F-35B can support itself in many respects and make operational planning easier.

"The F-35's abilities in stealth or be undetected basically enables it to take some of the requirements that we provide in a strike package," said Capili. "The intent was for the F-35 without having the need for a Prowler to jam radar, because they have the ability to not be detected. It's basically integrating the capabilities that we provide into a newer aircraft, which then reduces the requirement for the number of aircraft needed to carry out an operation. If the squadrons have a commonality in their aircraft, operational planning will be easier."

With the Marine Corps planning to change its AV-8B Harriers and EA-6B Prowlers over to F-35s is the retirement of a Prowler due to the expected new aircraft an assumption on the author's part ... or based on fact or statements by appropriate authorities. The first Prowler was officially retired June 10, 2011, when it made its final active duty flight. Pilots from both the Harrier and Prowler community are already being selected to fly the new F-35. As technology advances, the Marine Corps again marches into the future.

of the Wing."

Under Baker's tenure, the versatility of MWSS-271 was put to good use. While deployed and on other operations, the squadron consistently met its mission and completed duties not usually in the squadron's job description.

"The folks that you see standing out here represent about 700 Marines and Sailors," said Col. Daniel Conley, commanding officer of Marine Wing Support Group 27. "There are about 70 different military occupational specialties contained in this unit. As the commanders know, a well-led and well-trained MWSS can do not just its doctrinal mission, but a whole lot of other missions as well. While other units were packing up and heading home, not only did Paul Baker and the Workhorses take over the aviation ground support that enabled the wing to do its job, but they also took over those missions that other units couldn't or wouldn't do."

Baker deflected much of the credit, citing that much of the work was done by the members of the squadron.

"I got there, and I found a very well-trained and prepared unit ready for combat," said Baker. "You continue to strive and you continue to accomplish missions. Everything you do is preparation for combat. It was a great two-year command."

Rosenbloom has previous experience with support squadrons, having been the operations officer for MWSS-271's parent command, MWSG-27. Between his prior knowledge of MWSS-271 and Baker's guidance for the past two weeks, Rosenbloom expects the troops to stick to their exemplary performance and will be with them every step of the way.

"Devil Dogs, Sailors, I don't make a lot of promises," said Rosenbloom. "But I will make one here today, I will truly dedicate myself 100 percent every single day to living up to the motto of being the most ready when the nation is the least ready. I've been truly impressed over the last couple weeks and I look forward to meeting each and every one of you."

capabilities of the aircraft with training flights that included familiarization, tactical approaches, confined area landings, low altitude tactics, formations and night flights with the goal of assessing the aircraft's potential value to the IAF. With only 10 hours of MV-22 flight time, one of the visiting CH-53 pilots, flying a VMM-365 Osprey, conducted aerial refueling with a KC-130J from Marine Aerial Refueler Transport Squadron 252, where he was rated as "on par with any other transition pilot."

Perhaps most importantly, the visiting pilots experienced the MV-22's trademark features of speed, range and maneuverability - proven advantages over the helicopters that the Osprey has replaced. They learned, first hand, how the Osprey can keep its crews and passengers above the threat of ground fire during flight, and how its maneuverability, particularly its ability to rapidly accelerate and decelerate, reduces exposure to threats during approach and departure. As 2nd MAW Commanding General Maj. Gen. Jon Davis has been known to say, "By the time the bad guys know you're there, you're already gone."

As with any military personnel exchange, other benefits were realized. Both visits were a learning experience for the seasoned Israeli pilots on how U.S. Marines operate, and for the Marines who worked with them.

"We are not too different from each other, we think the same and understand each other very well," said Carmeli.

"We came to agree on most topics and how to accomplish the missions." Golan added, "The Marines did a marvelous job with their hospitality and professionalism, it took a lot of effort and they are very good people here."

Brendan K. Malyk, a radio maintenance chief with Marine Wing Communications Squadron 28 and president of the squadron's motorcycle club. Malyk and more than 200 other motorcyclists rode their bikes out to Cherry Point's Miller's Landing for the air station's inaugural Marine Corps Community Services Biker Bash June 24.

Marines let freedom ride during Cherry Point inaugural Biker Bash

CPL. TYLER J. BOLKEN

MCAS CHERRY POINT

The reverberation of a motorcycle's revving engine is an unmistakable sound – one of power, fortitude and freedom, which many Marines are drawn to.

The booming noise of bikes was heard throughout the air station June 24, as more than 200 motorcyclists, of which most were Marines, on cruisers and street bikes, motored through eastern Carolina's muggy, smoke-filled air to Cherry Point's

Miller's Landing for the inaugural Marine Corps Community Services Biker Bash.

The Marines' bikes lined up from one end of Miller's Landing to the other. The purpose of the gathering was to give the Marines a reason to ride out to an event they could enjoy together on what turned out to be a beautiful afternoon, explained Terry Clark, MCCS chief operating officer. Marines have shown to be inherently drawn to motorcycling, and Clark estimated that there are at least 800-1,000 motorcyclists at Cherry Point alone.

"It's freedom," said Gunnery Sgt. Brendan K. Malyk, as George Thorogood's "Bad to the Bone" blared in the background. "Being Marines, freedom is first and foremost on all of our minds," added Malyk, who is a radio maintenance chief with Marine Wing Communications Squadron 28 and president of the squadron's motorcycle club.

Malyk's passion for motorcycling and serving as a Marine mesh as one on his Cadillac Pearl-colored, shovelhead style-framed, custom built motorcycle that shimmers with Marine Corps inspired artwork on its tank and fenders, of which the rear reads "All gave some, some gave all."

"It's gone through several transformations," said Malyk, who drew up most of the bike's artwork while serving at sea on a Marine Expeditionary Unit. "I got kind of bored out there at times, so I spent a lot of time drawing."

Malyk was introduced to motorcycles at a young age and has been building and modifying them ever since. Malyk's passion extends to his fellow Marines, and he feels it's important for him to offer his years of experience to junior Marine motorcyclists.

"That is what events like the Biker Bash are all about," said Malyk. "Bikers can collaborate about what's going on, on the roads, and what new gear is on the market."

"Being Marines, freedom is first and foremost on all of our minds."

- Gunnery Sgt. Brendan K. Malyk MWCS-28 motorcycle club president

Twenty-six local motorcycle shops took part to better connect with the local riders and Clark said it's great when the local community shows their support.

"Safety is key on a motorcycle and making it accessible to the Marines as we can is important," Clark said.

Most of the groups of riders attended the bash with members of their squadron motorcycle club, going on their required monthly ride as part of the Marine Corps motorcycle mentorship program.

"The rides with the motorcycle clubs boost morale," said Sgt. James E. Bowlin, crew chief instructor with Marine Heavy Helicopter Training Squadron 302 at Marine Corps Air Station New River. "It's something for everybody to do as a group."

The Marine Corps' has been doing its best to adapt to this lifestyle that influences so many Marines.

"We're getting the Marines the best training they can get, and the numbers on the road are showing it," said Malyk.

Clark said MCCS hopes for the Biker Bash to become an annual event and considers it likely with the number of Marines that attended.

Main Gate Detour

Westbound Hwy 70 traffic entering Cherry Point next week will be detoured around the Roosevelt Blvd entrance to the Main Gate.

Beginning Monday, railroad crossing repairs on the Roosevelt Blvd extension straight out of the Main Gate, will close that part of Roosevelt Blvd for up to three days, primarily effecting traffic approaching from and departing to the east (Newport and Morehead City).

The main detour will direct air station traffic to enter the Cunningham Gate on Hwy 101, via Cunningham Blvd (near the Harrier on a stand display). From there, military and civilian police will direct traffic to ensure the smoothest transition of traffic onto the air station.

Traffic that is not traveling onto the air station will remain on Hwy 70 westbound through Havelock.

Please be patient and courteous during this construction period, pay close attention to posted signs and message boards, and obey traffic officials to ensure the speediest possible access to the air station.

Ragan's first Sprint Cup victory also first for Georgia racing family

David Ragan's first Sprint Cup victory, which came at Daytona International Speedway on Saturday in his 163rd career Cup start, was a long time in coming for him and his family. And for race fans in his home state of Georgia, it also had been a long time since anyone from the Peach State stood in Victory Lane at a Cup race, although the last two Nationwide Series races were won by Reed Sorenson, from Peachtree City, Ga., and Joey Logano, who once lived in the north Atlanta suburb of Alpharetta.

Georgia's last Cup win came in 2003, when Bill Elliott won the fall race at Rockingham.

That's a short stretch compared to the Ragan family of the South Georgia town of Unadilla.

"My grandfather, I never met him, but he owned a car," David Ragan said. "He never drove any, but he owned a car in the '40s and '50s."

Ragan's father, Ken, and uncle Marvin caught the racing fever as kids and eventually tried their hands at Cup racing, though with little success.

Ken Ragan, racing as an independent in cars owned by his brother, drove in 50 Cup races from 1983 to 1990 but never had a top-10 finish.

Once again, the racing fever spread to a new generation of the Ragan family.

"That's what ultimately sparked my interest," David Ragan said of his father's racing and the friends the family made during that time.

Young David started out racing Legends cars at Atlanta Motor Speedway and moved almost directly from there to the upper levels of NASCAR. His lack of experience hindered him early on, but he's learned on the job, as his Roush Fenway Racing teammate Matt Kenseth pointed out after they finished 1-2 in Saturday's Coke Zero 400 at Daytona.

"I've seen David mature a lot and learn a lot," Kenseth said. "When he came in here and started driving the 6 car, I don't know David's whole racing history, but he didn't have a lot of experience, especially driving big, heavy cars."

"He's had a couple of different crew chiefs and car chiefs and crews and groups until they found a good mix that worked really well with him. I don't know why it is like that, but you've got to get that right mix of people together and get them all working right together. It seems like he's got that right now."

And, as Kenseth pointed out, it was tough for a then 21-year-old Ragan to take over the car made famous by Mark Martin.

"Stepping in the 6 car after Mark leaving and all that stuff isn't exactly the easiest job in the world," Kenseth said.

Ragan nearly got his breakthrough win at Daytona in February. He was poised to win the Daytona 500 on a late-race restart but was penalized for changing lanes too soon.

Saturday's 400 miler played out almost exactly the same way, and this time Ragan made no mistakes. With a push from Kenseth, he held on throughout a green-white-checkered-flag run to the finish, redeeming himself for his earlier mistake.

"If we would have won at Martinsville this year, I would have said, 'Man, we've moved on past that Daytona race,'" he said. "But coming back here and to get that win here at Daytona is that extra little bit that I wanted kind of to show the Daytona race track. Here's what we've got."

"That makes it a little bit more special ... coming back here to Daytona, being able to run the same type of race we ran in February and learning from our mistake, not making a mistake."

He did, however, have several chances on restarts to mess up, and didn't.

"That's gratifying that we were able to come back to Daytona and kind of prove to the race track that we're better than that – that we can take you and we beat 'em," he said. "It feels good."

Harvick vaults ahead of Edwards to take lead in Cup points

Kevin Harvick heads to the inaugural Sprint Cup race at Kentucky Speedway as the series points leader, five points over previous leader Carl Edwards, who had a 25-point lead over Harvick entering Daytona.

Harvick got the lead largely because Edwards wrecked early at Daytona and wound up 37th.

Harvick, who finished seventh after drafting all night with his Richard Childress Racing teammate Paul Menard, said the key to a good points night was simply being there at the end.

"It's just one of those deals where if you can survive a night like this and you can get a decent finish; you always want to win, but they're a crap shoot at the end, and you've just got to be rolling to see what happens," he said.

Edwards said he decided early on to be aggressive, knowing he was in good shape points-wise.

"We were going to go out there and race a little harder this time," he said. "We had the points lead and not a lot to lose, so it's no big deal. It is what it is. If you take the last five restrictor plate races and average them out, we've done really well. We just have to make sure we do well in the Chase."
